From addressing innovation and funding to state-of-the-art patient care, SwedenBIO wraps up another highly successful NLSDays event

The seventh NLSDays united 1240 delegates from a record number of organizations across the global life science industry, to focus on improving healthcare technologies and delivery in the Nordics.

This year saw an extended first day with a number of satellite events, including educational sessions on clinical development, funding for SMEs, and advancing ATMPs into the clinic. There was also a series of pitches to showcase the best of Swedish and Danish life science from Medicon Valley, as well as the inaugural Nordic Life Science Awards.

Day 2 kicked off with the Opening Plenary session, which was delivered by Niklas Johansson, State Secretary to the Minister for Foreign Trade. He discussed the Swedish Government's commitment to innovation and the need for the industry to work together. Co-creation and collaboration continued to be common threads during many of the day's panel discussions and seminars. Financing and investment were also strong themes – from feeding innovation, which always needs funding, to health economics and preparing for an IPO.

The collaboration theme continued during day 3's panel sessions and seminars, which focused on metabolic diseases, oncology and individualized medicine. Discussions moved on to address how organizations across the Nordic ecosystem can work together to leverage local strongholds, and take a globally leading position for addressing future healthcare challenges.

The event also featured 46 company presentations with updates from organizations of all sizes, and 2 750 partnering meetings for delegates throughout the event.

Olivier Duchamp, Managing Director, NLSDays wrapped up the show:

– We would like to thank our regional co-hosts, our Nordic consortium partners, sponsors, exhibitions, presenters, speakers and delegates for making this such a great event. We are also happy to be back in Malmö for the next two upcoming years. This is really a hotbed for life science and business partnerships. See you again next year on September 8-10!
